PRICE THREE CENTS

The Food Value of a Soda Cracker

You have heard that some foods furnish fat, other foods make muscle, and still others are tissue building and heat forming.

You know that most foods have one or more of these elements, but do you know that no food contains them all in such properly balanced proportions as a good soda cracker?

The United States Government report shows that soda crackers contain less water, are richer in the muscle and fat elements, and have a much higher per cent of the tissue building and heat forming properties than any article of food made from flour.

That is why Uneda Biscuit should form an important part of every meal. They represent the superlative of the soda cracker, all their goodness and nourishment being brought from the oven to you in a package that is proof against air, moisture and dust—the price being too small to mention.

THE SCHEME WILL NOT WORK

A prominent resident of the First Ward in the City of Wilmington said to us the other day, "I have been living and voting in the First Ward for twenty years, and the City Election always comes in the odd numbered year. There have been twenty elections, at nineteen of which the Democrats carried the ward. Nineteen times, when the count was made, the election was over. But the Republicans carried the ward this time and the Councilman-elect from the First Ward. Of course, the true reason for the contest lies in the fact that Mr. Ross' election makes the Council Republican, in spite of the Democratic gerrymander. It is now proposed to have the old Council pass upon the qualifications of the new Council which does not meet until July 1st. This is so absurd as to be positively silly. If there is any one feature of the American system of government that is well established, it is that each legislative body is the sole judge of the election and qualification of its own members. To admit any other principle would be to turn the country over to anarchy. If the present Council of Wilmington has the right to pass upon Mr. Ross' election from the First Ward, and to seat his Democratic opponent, the next Council with its Democratic majority thus made, can pass upon the election of all Republican members elected to the succeeding Council, and declare all Democratic opponents seated, and so on, ad libitum. Thus popular government would become a farce, and elections worse than useless.

THAT REBATE

As a surprise, comes the announcement that the last Legislature so amended our tax laws that the rebate of five per cent. is only operative in July. When the law was first passed in 1901, the above provision applied, but as the large tax-payers of Wilmington, having their city taxes to pay in July, complained, the legislature extended the time until September 30th, which date had given entire satisfaction. No good reason has yet been assigned for the change, and had the proposition have been understood when it was before the Legislature, it could have been defeated. Now it is too late. The statement or explanation was given out that the Levy Court desired to get the taxes in. This would be a good excuse, if, as was formerly the case, the county needed the money at this time. But with a cash balance of approximately $200,000 at all times, laying in the bank and drawing no interest, it really seems like an imposition to require taxpayers to advance about as much more. Many of the people who have been in the habit of paying their taxes promptly to save the five per cent. are poor, and it is a serious matter to them whether they shall pay all their taxes in one month or have the time spread over three months. If they had known it was coming, some provision could have been made. Fortunately, it does not affect the taxables of Middletown so much, as our town taxes run till September 30th, for the rebate, and it will be necessary only to pay the county, road and poor taxes in the next month.

IN PHILADELPHIA

The Philadelphia gang is growing more demoralized every hour, and the mayor and his supporters more confident. The machine signifies its willingness to take down its ticket, nominate another of the kind the people want and institute every reform demanded. It even offers to call an extra session of the Legislature to pass a personal registration law and repeal the "ripper" bills.

But the mayor is not interested in these assurances of a change of heart. Every day he orders a new arrest, and every day certain placemen lose their jobs. "The arrest of John W. Hill, who was recently ejected from the office of chief of the filtration plant, promises to lead to the capture of even bigger fish. According to the testimony in the case, the accounts were padded and enormous sums were paid for work not in the specifications, and never done.

"The cry of 'reform within the party' isn't interesting the people much, as the gang is in control of the party machinery. The only reform the people appear to want at present is to send those who have been systematically robbing the city to jail. That accomplished, they will talk further reform."—Evening Journal.

PENINSULA SHIP CANAL

The revival of the proposition to build the Maryland and Delaware Ship Canal so as to bring the port of Baltimore nearer the ocean and save the long trip to and from the Chesapeake, is being received with favor. It is probable that some definite steps toward carrying out the project will be taken in the near future and the proposition be made a fact.

In discussing this proposed ship canal, there are only three routes to be considered. The first is the Choptank route, the second direct route via Centerville and the third the Sassafras route.

By the Choptank the distance from Baltimore to the ocean is 150 miles, the number of miles saved over the present route to the ocean via the Chesapeake Bay entirely being 175 miles and the estimated cost $12,000,000.

By the Sassafras River route the distance to the sea is 129 miles, a saving of 196 miles, and the cost will not be over $5,000,000.

The Sassafras River and Blackbird Creek, on this last route are partially excavated by nature and the waterway can be constructed for the price mentioned and lower, I figure, owing to the modern methods employed in excavating.

The United States engineers have reported that the Sassafras River route has no obstacles, no quick sand and no rock, the soil being chiefly clay and other soils admirably adapted to the present system of hydraulic dredging.

The question of ice in the winter and its obstruction to navigation is not greater in the bay for 30 miles north of North Point.

A canal by the Choptank route would cost double that of Sassafras River and is 20 miles further and four and one half hours longer each trip. It would require bridges and tide locks. This route would also require miles of breakwater and its ocean outlet would be at one of the most dangerous points on the coast.

The mouth of the Sassafras River is 25 miles from Seven-Foot Knoll and 22 miles to Townsend. The canal itself would be 16 miles from water to water. From Baltimore via the Chesapeake capes to the capes of Delaware at the mouth of Delaware Bay the distance is 325 miles, as it can be seen what a great saving of time would be made if Baltimore had the Delaware and Maryland ship canals.

UNITED STATES JURORS

In the United States Court on Tuesday a petit jury for the present term of the Circuit Court was drawn by Jury Commissioners William G. Mahaffy and J. Wilkins Cooch. For the first time in several years the name of a colored man was drawn for the jury. The name was that of Daniel P. Hamilton, at one time a well known colored resident of Wilmington. The jury drawn was as follows:

Wilmington—James S. Dobb, James M. Bryan, J. Smith Brennen, Joseph P. Cross, Charles G. Phillips, James I. Ford, Jesse K. Baylis, G. Parke Postles, Daniel Hamilton, colored, Peter A. Harty, Edward C. Jackson, Edgar Chandler, Lewis Sasse, J. Morton Poole, Elmer E. Mitchell, Samuel J. White, Victor duPont, Sr.

Christiana hundred—Thomas D. Lyman, Philip F. duPont.

White Clay Creek—James L. Crossan, James Hosinger.

Mill Creek—John M. Ball.

Pencader—T. Roseby McMullen.

New Castle—John T. Hayes.

Appoquinimink—Elias N. Moore.

South Murderkill hundred, Kent county—Carl Hughes.

Duck Creek—Harry A. Techudy.

Mispillion—Willis Lytton.

Seaford hundred, Sussex county—David M. Johnson, Samuel B. Posey, Isaac S. Giles, Thomas H. Rawlins.

Little Creek—Emory B. Higgins, S. Walter Anderson.

Northwest Fork—George W. Willin.

July 6th was fixed as the date for hearing the suit of Bashor vs. the Peoples Railway Company, and July 10th as the time for hearing the suit of Annie Butler, known as Annie Oakley, against the Every Evening Printing Company, for libel. No date has been fixed for the hearing of the other numerous cases which are pending in the court.

W. C. T. U. AWARDS PRIZES

An interesting temperance meeting was held in New Castle M. E. Church, Tuesday evening, when the Scientific Temperance Instruction Department of the W. C. T. U. held its rural New Castle County Prize Essay Contest, with Mrs. J. R. Milligan of St. Georges, State Superintendent of this department, presiding. The meeting was opened with singing, prayer by Rev. C. W. Prettyman, pastor of the church, after which the scripture lesson was read by Miss E. J. Dempsey.

The essays were then read and judged, and six prizes awarded, the first going to Miss Lydia Nickle of Delaware City, and Miss Mary Mitchell of Hockessin.

During the meeting remarks were made by Rev. C. W. Prettyman, Mr. George W. Todd and Mrs. L. W. Emerson. Miss Quimby, of New Castle, sang as a solo "Rock Me to Sleep," and Miss Rieta Emerson gave a very appropriate selection "The Strike in Millville."

Miss Nickle was the winner of the first prize in the contest at Delaware City last week, and will compete for the state prize, which will be awarded in the Garfield Theatre, next Friday evening.

"OLD DELAWARE" CLOSES

With Drill by Cadets, Alumni Meeting and Commencement Dance

Once more has "Old Delaware" closed her doors for the summer months after having turned out into the world a class of twenty-five graduates who will work out their paths in life in the different branches of pursuits for which they have become qualified.

Following the graduating exercises Wednesday morning the Delaware College Cadets, Captain E. W. McCaskey, military instructor of the institution in command, gave an exhibition drill in the field in the rear of the college.

The competition for the Roberts medal covered the entire maneuvers and Company A was declared the winner. The judges were Captain S. H. Hosinger and Captain Medill and Lieutenant Bowen of Company E, First Delaware Infantry, stationed at Newark.

Promotions Announced

Captain McCaskey issued an order, announcing the following promotions in the cadet battalion:

Major—Moore.

Captains—Company A, Griffith; Company B, Stewart.

Adjutant—Cram.

Quartermaster—Neill.

First Lieutenant—Company A, Fader; Lewes, Company B, Clash and Taggart; Artillery, Lovett and Murray; signal corps, Fulton and Harkness.

Second Lieutenant—Company A, Wyatt and Shaffer; Company B, Foster and Derby; artillery, Ward and Hauber; signal corps, Lawson and Edwards.

Sergeant Major—Messick.

Quartermaster Sergeant—Keppell.

Color Sergeant—Griffin.

Company—Company A, Warrington, F. Smith, Hudson, Perkins, Homewood. Company B—Joseph McFarlin, Bell, Buckmaster, Diefenderfer, Artillery, Stevens, J. Smith, Singler, Crossan, Cooper. Signal—Francis, Voss, Ridgely, Price, Blake.

Corporals—Company A, Collins, Taylor, Stokley, Evans. Company B—Kilren, Herman, Storket, Tinney. Artillery—McCaskey, Atkins, Brown, Ward. Signal—Taubenhaus, Stubbs, Draper, Mulligan.

Delaware Alumni

During the afternoon the annual meeting of the Delaware College Alumni Association was held and officers for the ensuing year were elected.

They were as follows: President, Richard T. Pilling; vice-president, William H. Heald, of Wilmington; secretary and treasurer, Clarence A. Short, of Newark.

A committee comprising F. W. Curtis, Lucien Green and the Rev. J. H. Mitchell was appointed to devise ways and means of making the Alumni Association more active in behalf of its alma mater, and also to co-operate with the athletic committee comprising Mr. Short, Dr. W. H. Steel, Joseph H. Hosinger and Lee O. Willis, in trying to establish an athletic fund for the college.

Commencement Dances

The commencement dances given in the drill room in recreation hall Wednesday evening by the junior class in honor of the graduating class closed the exercises of the year.

The large room was decorated with the college colors and with ferns, palms and daisies in profusion, while from the outside of the building the letter "D" blazed forth in electric lights.

About two hundred persons attended the dance in the course of the night, and music was furnished by the orchestra from the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

THE MAN ABOUT TOWN

He still sees the Saturday night nuisance continued. Why is this? That's a fair question, when a thing becomes a nuisance, and the authorities are made aware of it, there should be some action taken by them to stop it or at least abate it. If their police are not capable of performing a plain duty, then get some who are capable and will do it. This nuisance I will name again—the crowding and lining up on our sidewalks and crossings and near them, by the negro element. It is getting more and more of a nuisance all the time. The writer cannot understand why some action is not taken to stop it. It without doubt, seriously interferes with the business of the ice cream and refreshment parlors. Many ladies go without things they would like to purchase on a Saturday evening, sooner than push and crowd their way through a lot of impudent negroes. Some few merchants may think they are netting a profit by catering to these darkies, but they are mistaken. By keeping their stores clear of a loading crowd of darkies they would be the gainers. It is exceedingly unpleasant for a white man or woman to go in a store with a crowd of darkies lined up against the counters, to say nothing of the sidewalk and doorway.

Mr. Merchant, why should they not be waited upon as others people and be requested to pass out of the way? Seemingly you are allowing them a liberty you would not allow others. You can help abate this nuisance, and if the authorities take the matter in hand in a proper manner, this nuisance will cease to exist. If all will study this question carefully they will see that the hotels are the only gainers by the existing conditions. Let the white man or woman have an equal right as well as comfort in walking our streets any evening. No class has any right, any lawful right, to a monopoly of our streets or any part of them. CITIZEN.

BUY YOUR OWN PAPER

A man who was too economical to subscribe for his home paper sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by his neighbor. In his haste the boy ran over a $4 stand of bees and in ten minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His cries reached his father, who ran to his assistance, and, failing to notice a barbed wire fence, ran into it, breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy and running a $5 pair of pants. The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence and got into the corn field and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, the wife ran, upset a gallon churn of rich cream into a basket of kittens, drowning the whole flock. In her hurry she dropped a $25 set of false teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled cream and into the parlor, ruining a $20 carpet. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man, the dog broke up eleven sitting hens, and the cat got out and chewed the tails off four fine shirts.

SUSTAIN CHARGES

Methodist Judicial Conference Suspend Drs. Corkran and Baker For One Year

At the request of counsel for the church the Judicial Conference which heard the appeal of the Rev. Charles S. Baker, who was deposed from the ministry by a select number of the Wilmington M. E. Conference at its session in Wilmington in March on charges growing out of stock transactions, changed the verdict to suspension for one year and confirmed the verdict of the conference suspending the Rev. Wilbur F. Corkran for a similar period on similar charges.

That such a request was made by the church was due to a desire for justice, it being the opinion that the two ministers were implicated to an equal extent and that Dr. Baker should not be deposed while Dr. Corkran was only suspended for one year.

The conference convened in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, at Seventh and Fourteenth streets, on Tuesday morning and was composed of fifteen ministers, five from the New York conference, five from Troy conference and five from the Wyoming conference. Only one member was absent, he being detained by illness.

The case of Dr. Corkran was heard first and the Judicial Conference unanimously sustained the verdict of the Wilmington Conference, also sustaining the penalty of suspension for one year.

Under the charge of gambling three of the fourteen members voted not to sustain the charge, and the three members explained their reason for so voting, saying that it was not clear in their minds that marginal dealings constituted gambling, and also that it was not clear in their minds that Dr. Corkran knew it was gambling. Eleven of the ministers voted to sustain the charge, however, and the vote to sustain the verdict and penalty was unanimous.

The vote in the case of Dr. Corkran was taken about midnight on Thursday night and the case of Dr. Baker began Friday morning.

The first thing done in this case was for the council of the church to request the conference as a matter of justice to sustain the verdict of the lower court, and to reduce his penalty from deposition to the same penalty inflicted upon Dr. Corkran, who was suspended for one year.

The conference reversed the verdict of fraud in the case of Dr. Baker, but unanimously sustained the other charges, unanimously reducing the verdict.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE

In a recent address by Cardinal Gibbons to the women graduates of Trinity College, Washington, D. C., he solemnly warned them against woman suffrage and declared: "Because we give our women a college education, it does not follow that we intend to clamor for the prerogatives of men." In times past men murmured about all the "prerogatives" there were, higher education among the rest, and if women had never "clamored" for this one, they would be where their forefathers were when they were not even taught the alphabet.

If Cardinal Gibbons did not wish his church women to clamor for the so-called "prerogatives of men" he should have kept the doors of the higher educational institutions closed to them. Catholic women have not shown themselves slow in usurping the so-called prerogatives of men in the past whenever opportunity offered.

In happy contrast to the utterances of Cardinal Gibbons to his women graduates, are those of Bishop McVickar of Rhode Island in his address to the graduating class of Bryn Mawr College and Supreme Court Justice David J. Brewer in his address at Vassar College. Bishop McVickar said:

"I hope and pray that we may see woman suffrage come to pass soon. In this fuller citizenship there is no chance that woman would unsex herself. I believe that the paths she would walk in would not only be brightened, but they would be straightened."

Justice Brewer after expressing his belief in woman suffrage said:

"Who shall say that before gray hair shall cover the heads of the women here to-night there may not sit in the White House a woman who, like Queen Victoria, will shed lustre upon this country as Victoria shed lustre upon England."

CINDERELLA

BY GLENN

The scent of honeysuckle, roses and magnolia, wafted up by a drowsy summer breeze, ravished me through my sense of smell; and, borne by the same breeze, there saluted my sense of hearing the sound of a voice singing in a high-pitched, old-fashioned key, the words:

"This world is but a fleeting show," and I knew that my aunt Patience, in the sitting-room below, was viewing disconsolately the vanities of this world, and the proneness of youthful minds to yield to their allurements with solemnity.

The song proceeded with solemnity befitting the sentiments, while I engaged myself in vigorous, albeit surreptitious, preparations for a visit to Alma Dentley's party that very evening. My solicited, and I may add sternly-refused, permission to attend said party had doubtless led to the train of thought and song that reigned below. It had also served to render me desperate enough to resolve upon an attendance without permission; and in pursuance of this resolution I was making pale pink satin and white lace bows for the adornment of my Swiss and lace dress, forming slippers and gloves into a small, easily-transported bundle, and otherwise making myself ready.

Perhaps, before I proceed further in this account of my own duplicity toward my worthy aunt, it would be well for me to introduce myself, and bring forward whatever I can toward the palliation of my conduct.

I, Bernice Bramleigh, was born in France, and had lived in that sunny, delightful country until my twelfth year, at which time my mother's death occurred. Then my father returned to his own home, America, and after placing me under the charge of my aunt Patience, his only sister, returned to the land which, for love of my mother, he had made his home for so long.

After the newness of my surroundings had worn away, and with it the glow of my timidity, the discoveries that aunt Patience and I made were, I must confess, not agreeable. My aunt was an eminently proper, Christian woman, whose education had been strictly Presbyterian—a woman set in her views, and conscientious in her every action regarding them. I was wild and untrained, having inherited from my French mamma certain airy ways and a love of pleasure that my aunt insisted on styling frivolity; and so my aunt and I were mutual trials.

With conscientious, undeviating firmness, she endeavored to do her duty by her brother's child, and train me to what she deemed a girl should be; and by every impulse and individuality, rather than by any desire or intent upon my part, I tried and disappointed her. Not being able to understand why things so widely different from those I had known in my childhood as right were enforced by my aunt, I even while yielding obedience, chafed under each restraint; and faithful courses of catechism, long over-seams, and ditto moral lectures, failed to subdue what was more natural than wicked.

My father, heart-broken and desolate, remained on the Continent, paying only brief and occasional visits to his home; he believed—and rightly, too—that I was in good hands. His long, loving letters and beautiful gifts came like bright spots of sunshine in my childhood and girlhood.

Under my aunt's careful and judicious management I grew up strong, healthy, and rosy, for not a precaution to insure my physical well-being did she neglect, any more than she did for my spiritual. In the first she was blessed with complete success, but in the second I fear her reward was diminutive.

As time went on, I attended the seminary near our home, during my years of school life there finding many congenial friends, whose confidence and affection I fully enjoyed, and with whom I entered into many a forbidden frolic.

And now I shall return to the day when aunt Patience had said: "No, Bernice, you cannot go to Alma Dentley's party this evening. I hear they are to have dancing there. If Alma's mother can reconcile it with her conscience to allow anything of the kind, I cannot allow you to attend it." And I had rushed upstairs with my seventeen-year-old heart and mind strongly set upon the forbidden pleasure.

I had thought of it so long, the fear and would refuse making the desire all the stronger—longed and dreamed of it—till I could not give it up. And so it was that while the women of the party sang of "fleeing shows"—to whom all youthful desires, all youthful pleasures, and emotions had come and gone—the girl of seventeen, with heart throbbing with expectancy, made hasty preparations for the most fleeting of shows with trembling fingers—because to her the joy and newness, as well as the pain and sorrow, were yet to come.

Six times struck the clock below, proclaiming that the hour of tea was near at hand; and up the stairs came a summons to me, in reply to which I descended to the cool dining-room, and thence to the kitchen, where Mary, the maid of all work, was making preparations for tea. In those preparations I joined with a zest that delighted my aunt, without awakening a suspicion within her heart of the reason, and accepting my proffer to attend to the setting of the table, the rare old china of which she seldom trusted to the hands of a servant, she did—that I had earnestly hoped she would do—went into the sitting-room, leaving me free to open fire upon Mary.

Fortunately Mary had a strong admiration and sympathy for me, and I found an easy conquest. Not holding Presbyterians very herself, and enjoying the country dissipation which she was wont to frequent, Mary was quite overcome with the romance of my going to the grand ball at the great house of the village, and readily promised her assistance; and, what was of more importance, promised to enlist the services of James, our man, who entertained an affection for her, and also shared her admiration for me.

My plan, a daring one, was as follows: Aunt Patience retired early, and after she was safely in bed I was to dress, and with Mary's assistance descend to the kitchen, and thence to the barn, where James would have the carriage ready, and would drive me to Colonel Dentley's. Mary, who slept in the kitchen, would admit me upon my return.

Tea-time came, and I tried to eat with my usual appetite, but the food was more than distasteful to me; I could only choke down a few berries and some cake, and even that became an impossibility when Mary, passing behind aunt's chair, signaled to me that James consented.

With every nerve quivering with excitement, it was only the sternest of necessities that enabled me to sit quietly in my chair during the hour that followed, answering—sadly at random, I fear—my aunt's remarks; and great was my relief when, at an hour even earlier than was her wont, she signified her intention of retiring. After bidding her good-night, I sped up to my own room and drew forth my dress, with every possible feeling of contrition smothered by excitement.

It was half-past eight. I had over a half hour in which to make my toilette; and since mine was no fine lady's wardrobe, it was ample time. At last Mary came up with the information that aunt was asleep; and, lighting the lamps of my toilette table, I commenced to array myself, with Mary standing by, an admiring if not impartial critic.

Have I told I was dark?—or rather my hair was almost black in its intense brown, my eyes dark, and my complexion comparatively pink and white; my eyes, which were large and expressive, gave to my face, which otherwise would be babyish, a rather startling effect.

Then, when the lamps were lighted, and the curtains closely drawn to prevent a gleam of light shining out, when I stood in the full blaze of light before the glass, the question which all day had been vaguely haunting me, rose up and held me in sterner perplexity. My hair: what should I do with my hair?—neither curl, braid or puff had I to add to it, or to assist in forming it into a presentable coiffure—nothing but a heavy profusion of curls, and they falling only a little below my shoulders.

Deep thought came and drew a straight line down the middle of my forehead; and then my natural invention came and smoothed it away.

I always dressed with a certain individuality, which although unlike every one else, was not glaringly peculiar; "the girls" were pleased to term it my "Frenchness." Now, I combed all the curls high up and pinned them into a twist that can only be described as indescribable. It did very well, however, and with several curled ends falling carelessly here and there, was quite a picturesque coiffure, to which two pale pink roses, fastened among the curls, added much and quite satisfied me.

Then I donned my dress, which—crowning vanity over which my aunt would have despaired—I had bereft of the sleeves, putting in their place deep pleated thread lace and loops of pink satin, rendering my princess dress, with square-cut neck, quite a respectable evening dress. Last but not least came my exquisite corals, palest pink set in Etruscan gold, which my father had sent me from Naples.

When all was completed, I viewed myself with much complacency, and amid Mary's rapturous compliments, prepared for my ignominious exit through the kitchen. Having reached the carriage in safety, and being beyond a doubt upon my way to the ball, I was disposed to laugh triumphantly. Just then the possibility of discovery mattered very little to me, and there was a possibility of discovery, though but a slight one. The guests would almost entirely be of families from the neighboring towns and cities, G—being only the Dentleys' country place, and there would be none of aunt Patience's friends present.

Upon my arrival in the dressing-room, I was greeted with both rapture and surprise.

"Bernice," cried Fannie Glenn, "how did you get your aunt's consent to sacrifice all your hopes of a blessed immortality, by coming to a dance?"

"Hush, Fan," I cried, "and all of you, for they were clamoring for an explanation; and I told them all about it, amid shouts of sympathetic laughter."

"The blessed witch," cried Fay Ashleigh, "we might have known she would do something desperate; and just see that toilette, 'Frenchier' than ever."

"Alma will be so glad," said Callie Hart; "she told me she was dreadfully worried for fear you couldn't come; she knew your aunt's prejudice against dancing. She wants you for a particular reason, ma belle; her brother Dare has come all the way down from New York, to—well—to attend this ball, and perhaps meet the little girl that he was charmed with at Commencement last May, whose very vigilant auntie prevented his being introduced."

"Callie, do stop," I interrupted, "you are positively too ridiculous. Which brother is it, girls?" Here I had a cringing knowledge that I did not need to be informed of a feature of Dare Dentley's handsome face.

"Wicked girl!" exclaimed Fan; "there, you're blushing to your very fingertips; don't you try to gild the innocent, Bernice, you can't do it yet; now come and go down with mamma and I."

The rooms, which were exquisitely decorated, were pretty well filled when we entered, and our progress to the end of the parlors, where Colonel and Mrs. Dentley stood, was slow. Alma was near them, and by her side, I saw at first glance, was her brother, the gentleman who had been frequently in my thoughts and whose exquisite bouquet I had carefully treasured since Commencement day.

"There he is, Cinderella," said Fan, "there is the Prince; ah, he sees you—those roses have fixed his gaze."

"I am not at all certain," I return, "your forget-me-nots may be the attraction."

"Not I; it is fore-ordained that Cinderella shall catch the Prince. How about your slippers—are they securely fastened?"

By this time we reach our hostess.

"Bernice," said Alma, contemplating me in amazement, "can it be you in the flesh? I am so glad, dear; I didn't dare hope to see you."

"How do you think she appeared this?" asked Fan, every blonde curl on her head expressing mischief.

"Oh, Fan, don't; you will certainly ruin me—for I saw an interested look on Dare Dentley's face, and I was for the first time filled with a sense of the impropriety of my conduct.

But Fan proceeded unabashed, "Alma, the dear child came very much like Cinderella in the fairy books, only the god-mother didn't assist her; she ran away after the godmother was asleep."

By this time I was scarlet, and wished I had not come. What would Mr. Dentley think of me?

"Now she is trying to look repentant," pursued the little torment, "but you needn't try; you know you are glad, you wicked child."

Fan was just my age. Alma laughed but drew me close to her, saying, "I am glad you did it, Bernice, I wanted you here so badly this eve;" then, "allow me to introduce my brother Dare to you: Miss Bernice Bramleigh—Dare Dentley."

To describe the ball and my enjoyment of it, is impossible; suffice to say it was moments of swift, fleeting enchantment; an enchantment in which all my inherited French nature seemed to find its natural air and live and breathe, in which every thought of my wickedness in deceiving my aunt was lost. I flirted, and laughed, and talked, and Dare Dentley hardly left my side. I had faithfully promised James to return at half-past eleven; but it was twelve instead before I thought of the time, and said, "Ah, I must go."

"Hurry," said Fan, who was near, "or the clock will strike, Cinderella."

A few moments after, when I had made my adieux, and with Mr. Dentley still in attendance, was going down the long avenue to where my faithful James awaited me, my escort said, laughingly: "Are you afraid of your wicked god-mother, that you insist on going so early?"

Then the first shadow fell over my happiness, and I said, very seriously: "Mr. Dentley, I shall never forgive myself if my conduct and Fan's remarks have given you a wrong impression of my aunt. She is very good and kind to me, and I shall be very much ashamed of my wicked disobedience to-night, though I cannot find it in my heart to regret it to-night."

"You certainly cannot expect me to regret it," he replied, gravely. "I have heard much of your aunt from my sister Alma, as well as of yourself, and—smiling at me, 'I hope to make her acquaintance soon, and if possible win her good opinion.'"

Then he stood, so handsome in the moonlight, watching us drive away. After I had reached my room safely that night, and was sleepily putting away my things, I discovered to my consternation that in the bundle I had hurriedly put together in the dressing-room, there was only one of the pair of slippers I had placed there, and I began to think tribulation for my sins had commenced even that early. My lovely French slippers had been my particular vanity, and I wondered how I could account to aunt Patience for the disappearance. Resolving to have James go over the road early in the morning in search of it, I put the mateless slipper away in its box and retired.

My aunt doubtless was surprised at my unusually good behavior all the following day, for my conscience had commenced to give me reproachful twinges whenever I thought of my disobedience. James at my direction had gone carefully over the road, but failed to discover a trace of my lost property, and altogether I felt as all sinners ought to feel, miserable.

I brightened up that afternoon, however, when Alma and her brother called to invite me to a croquet party, an invitation which, as there was no dancing, my aunt permitted me to accept; and Mr. Dentley, who completely won her by his dignified bearing and deferential air, was graciously accorded permission to call for me.

"A very nice and well-beloved young man," she remarked after they had gone. "I have no objection to your accepting his escort, Bernice."

And so it was, through those lovely summer months, Dare won aunt Patience's confidence, and gained for me many privileges I never otherwise would have enjoyed; and the days passed happily, with picnics, boating and parties, while I, through the enjoyment of it all, was unconsciously learning what was to make me a better and truer girl and woman.

"Cinderella" had become quite my nickname, for Fan never neglected an opportunity of teasing me, and Alma, and even Dare, called me by it occasionally. Whenever I was reminded of the occurrence that led to it, I had the grace to blush and feel very much like a naughty child, at which they were vastly amused.

It seemed to me that all the good things were to be crowded into that brief summer, when a letter came from papa announcing his immediate return. I did not know till long after, that a letter from aunt Patience had suddenly awakened him to the fact that his "little girl" was a child no longer, but I was principally engaged in dreaming of those days.

My awakening came one morning just before Dare's departure to New York—a basket of exquisite flowers directed to "Cinderella," and under the mass of fragrant bloom I found a long-lost white slipper, with a note in which "the Prince" claimed me for his own; and I took note, slipper and all, straight to my aunt Patience, and telling her the whole story, asked her forgiveness.

I am married now, and look back with sorrow upon many of my girlish frolics, among which is one that causes my husband and some of my friends to teasingly address me as "Cinderella;" but, though I would warn my girl friends against a similar course, I can not find it in my heart to regret the escapade that won me "My Prince."

BE TRUE

BY EMILY SANBORN
Dare to be true, in every place,
In every scene of life,
Turn error, falsehood, all aside,
Stand firm, and smile the strife.

Let others see that you are true
In your convictions strong;
Till hold the balance in their view,
Twixt every right and wrong.

So may you all some suffering know,
Some need you never rue;
And this will be your greatest joy,
In that you dared "be true."

Be true to every worldly good,
To friendship, honor, too,
True in religion, faith and hope,
To "thine own self be true."

Thus far during 1905 automobiles have killed sixty-two persons and injured 793. Persistent effort may still bring the 1905 figures up to the railway mortality. Its too early in the season to forecast percentages.

Count the market price of "the poor farmer's" land, figure out the value of the stock, put in his bank account and you will find that the average farmer is worth a good deal more than the average townman.

Mr. William H. Fenimore has been appointed trustee of the poor for Blackbird Hundred to succeed Mr. John Beth, who resigned to accept the more lucrative position of tax collector. He was sworn in on Saturday, and is now ready to assume the new duties.

Summer is here for sure. Monday broke all records so far this season. In many places during the afternoon the temperature was 98 degrees in the shade. Some thermometers which were well sheltered recorded less than this, but most of them were working overtime in showing the high records.

"Lord help the millionaires!" exclaimed a Lacon philosopher. "There is Rockefeller, with no appetite. There is Carnegie, who can't stay long in one place. Carnegie has the long suffering of dyspepsia, and the rest of 'em are dying with envy, because they're not as rich as the three of 'em! Blessed be bacon and greens, and health, with the grace of God!"

Here is a prophecy of a Canadian newspaper: "The city home of the future will contain no stoves. Cooking will be done by power, the building will be heated from a central plant, elevators will run from cellar to garret, and breakfast, lunch and dinner will be supplied from a co-operative center. Not only will the homes of the future be cleaned by power, but the dust will be removed by a pneumatic exhaust system."

Lieutenant-Governor I. T. Parker left Monday for Nashville, Tenn., where he will represent Delaware at the meeting of the National Council of the Junior Order United Mechanics. Mr. Parker was elected national representative from this State and will therefore take part in the Supreme Council meetings. There is no more enthusiastic member of the order than General Parker, and Delaware will be well represented.

S. Maxwell Harrington of Dover, has purchased an automobile. He with Alden B. Richardson, H. I. Beers, Jr., and Edward Heide made the trip from Philadelphia in the machine and had an exciting experience. They left Philadelphia at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, and, after a series of mishaps in which they were obliged to push the machine through mud up to the axles reached Middletown about 2 o'clock the next morning. The run from Middletown to Dover was made without accident and they arrived at Dover at noon on Tuesday.

William Wright, 22 years, met with a fatal accident on Tuesday at R. T. Cann's saw mill, near Kirkwood. He was employed in carrying lumber at the mill and by accident made a misstep, falling on the revolving circular saw cutting entirely through his ribs in an instant. Dr. Cann was immediately summoned and although having no hope of saving his life, it was decided to send him by train to a hospital in Wilmington, but death came before Porter's Station was reached. He was a son of Mr. James Wright and a resident of Kirkwood, and had only gone to work at the mill on the morning of the day he was killed.

The harvesting of wheat has begun in earnest and the prospect is for a large yield in this vicinity. There are a number of growers who contemplate surpassing all previous records, but the biggest crops will not be known until after the threshing machines are through with their work.

GEORGE W. SAVIN A SUICIDE

Hung Himself in the Barn of Herbert Conner Near Warwick, Md.

George W. Savin, a farm hand, who was employed by Mr. Herbert Conner, Warwick, Md., committed suicide Tuesday morning, by hanging himself in his employer's barn. He began work early in the morning, but soon left the field, and did not return, and his lifeless body was found at noon hanging to one of the large beams in the barn. The act was doubtless committed about 8 o'clock as he left the field shortly after 7 o'clock, and was not seen alive again. Domestic troubles are supposed to be the cause of his self destruction. Savin resided in Middletown for several years and only moved to the Conner farm in the spring. Mr. Conner reported the affair to 'Squire Cora, who notified the coroner, and undertaker J. H. Emerson was authorized to remove the body to his undertaking rooms, where the coroner held an inquest Wednesday morning, a verdict being rendered of "suicide." The remains will be taken to Warwick for interment, funeral services being held in the M. P. Church at 2 o'clock this afternoon, interment in cemetery adjoining the church.

CHURCH NOTES

Bethesda Epworth League meets in the lecture room of the M. E. Church every Sunday evening at 6:45 o'clock. Everybody is invited to attend. The topic for to-morrow evening is: "The Vast Field of Southern Asia." Mat. 1:11; Matt. 8:11; John 10:16.

The Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor of Forest Presbyterian Church, meets every Sunday evening at 6:45 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to everybody. The topic for to-morrow evening is: "Our National Heritage." Isa. 55:1-13. Leader, Miss Houston.

The first quarterly conference for this year of Bethesda M. E. Church will be held this (Saturday) afternoon at 2 o'clock. The quarterly love feast will be held to-morrow morning at 9:30 a.m.; preaching by the pastor at 10:30 a.m.; preaching by the Presiding Elder at 7:30 P. M.

St. Anne's parish will observe its Bi-centennial to-morrow by appropriate services in the old Church. It commemorates the erection of the first church on the present site in 1705. The present brick structure was not erected until 1708. The services to-morrow will be at 10:30 A. M., and 2:30 P. M. In the morning the Bishop of Delaware will preach the sermon. In the afternoon an historical page will be read by the Rev. William J. Wilkie and addresses will be made by the Rev. F. M. Munson, L. L. D., Bishop Coleman and others. Governor Lea has signified his intention of being present at the morning service. The occasion is one of considerable historic interest and it is hoped that large numbers will come together in response to the invitation which is cordially extended to all.

LARGE WHEAT CROP
The report of the statistician of the Department of Agriculture is that our wheat crop of this year promises to be larger than any we have had for a number of years past. There is a promise that the winter wheat harvest will exceed that of last year by nearly 100,000,000 bushels, and that the spring wheat harvest will be 80,000,000 bushels greater than the harvest of 1904. Thus the indications are that we shall have a crop of wheat equivalent to 727,000,000 bushels, or larger than any wheat crop harvested since the phenomenal yield of 1901. The acreage this year is 47,336,000 which would seem to imply a larger relative yield than that obtained during the harvest of 1901, for at that time the land set apart for wheat-growing fell only a little short of 50,000,000 acres. The large yield of this year is due apparently to favorable climatic conditions. This conclusion is supported by the fact that the indicated oat harvest is 958,000,000 bushels, which, with one exception, that of 1902, is the record crop for oats. Of course, there are chances of adverse conditions that will prevent the realization of these hoped-for results.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Levi Black, an aged colored man, was struck by lightning and instantly killed Wednesday evening. Deceased was aged about 80 years, and had lived with S. F. Shallerross for a long time. He has been living with Hon. James T. Shallerross for some years, and it was at Mr. Shallerross' residence, near Odessa, where he was killed. He was standing in the pump-shed at the time, the bolt coming suddenly and he fell dead instantly. The lightning appeared to have struck him on the top of his head, running down his side and setting his clothing afire, which was put out by Mr. Shallerross. The shed was slightly demolished. Two or three other persons were very near the man at the time, including Mr. and Mrs. Shallerross themselves, and a colored man, but no serious injury was sustained by any of them. It was a peculiar occurrence throughout but a most fortunate one in not killing more than the one man.

DOWNY-BORN NUPTIALS

Mr. Harry J. Downey of this town, was united in marriage to Miss Theresa W. Roehm on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, 206 N. Van Buren street, Wilmington. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Henry C. Baum in the presence of a large number of relatives and invited guests. Miss Viola F. Downey, sister of the groom was the bridesmaid, and Mr. Paul Roehm, brother of the bride was the best man, and Mrs. Charles Bergher played the wedding march. The ushers were Messrs. Albert Alexander and Augustine Vite.

A reception was held immediately after the ceremony, and Mr. and Mrs. Downey reached Middletown on the 12:30 A. M. train Friday morning, where they will reside. The bride received many handsome and useful presents. The Transcript extends congratulations.

GRUESOME REMINDER OF TRAGEDY

While fishing in the Delaware river channel Wednesday off Chester, Pa., David Cline caught in his net what at one time had been a valuable Parker gun. Chief of Police McGinnis is inclined to believe that it is the missing gun of George Eyre, the National Guard officer and member of the Alpha Boat Club, whose mysterious murder created such a sensation in that section of the State several years ago. The gun was never found when Eyre was carried with him when he left the boat club house on a gunning trip across the river, and the one recovered Wednesday corresponds to a remarkable degree with Eyre's fowling piece.

Arthur Atwell, who farms the John Jay place, near Newark, was attacked on Saturday by a colored farm hand, from Virginia, after a dispute over a gate. Atwell tripped and fell and was choked by the negro, who bit him upon the arm. Officer Frick and Jex got upon the negro's trail and arrested him. Magistrate King held him for Court on the charge of assault with intent to kill.

THE COMMENCEMENT

In the auditorium of the Opera House Monday night the Commencement exercises of the Middletown High School were held, and a class of seven young men and women was graduated.

The stage was prettily decorated with blue and gold, the class colors, and cut flowers and potted plants, and the large hall was crowded with relatives and friends of the graduating class. Music was furnished by the Middletown Orchestra. Vocal music was a pleasing feature by a double quartet and solo singing of Miss Alice Humphrey, of Wilmington, greatly pleased the audience.

Miss Humphrey has an unusually sweet soprano voice, and sings with the utmost ease. Her natural, unaffected manner most effectively delighted the audience. Rev. W. J. Wilkie opened the exercises with an invocation and Miss Mary Chandler Gill delivered the address of welcome. The essays and the subjects of the graduates follow: Essay, "Under the Open Sky," Miss Josephine B. Cochran; "What Knowledge is of Most Worth," Ernest Howard Sirmann; "Music in Poetry and Fiction," Miss Prudence Helena Lewis; "Our Flag," Victor Herbert Jones; "Fair Women in Far Japan," Miss Helen Z. Davis; "Facing One's Work," Miss Anna N. Denny.

The presentation of diplomas to the graduates was made by President of the School Board Geo. D. Kelley, in a few well-timed remarks, after which he introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. Francis H. Green, of the West Chester Normal School, whose wit, interspersed with words of wisdom were excellent and highly appreciated. Prof. Green is a speaker who needs to be heard but once to create a desire to hear him again. Rev. Hutchins dismissed the large audience with the benediction.

GOVERNOR MAKES APPOINTMENTS

DOVER, June 22d.—The last Legislature created a State Board of Records, the duties of which will be to preserve and catalogue the records of Delaware. Governor Lea to-day appointed the following as members of the board:

New Castle County—Henry C. Conrad and Mrs. J. Ernest Smith, of Wilmington.

Kent County—Insurance Commissioner George W. Marshall, of Milford, and Mrs. Henry Ridgely, of Dover.

Sussex County—Dr. Thomas Robinson, of Georgetown, and Miss Julia Burton, of Lewes.

The Governor also appointed Samuel L. Shaw, of Harrington, to be a notary public, and then made these military appointments for Company H, National Guard of Delaware, of New Castle:

William E. Myers to be captain; Thomas Z. Gemmill to be first lieutenant; and Richard S. Rodney, to be second lieutenant.

PHYSICIANS ORGANIZE

Physicians of Georgetown have formed an association which has for its object the protection of its members as well as a more efficient service to the public and a general improvement of the ethical standing of the profession. The association comprises all the physicians of the town—Drs. J. B. Waples, C. R. Layton, O. D. Robinson, J. H. Hammond, G. F. Jones, J. H. Chipman and R. Paynter. They hold weekly meetings at the home of one of the members and discuss subjects of general and special interest to the medical fraternity.

They have also adopted the following minimum fees for professional visits: For town visits, 7 A. M. to 9 P. M., $1 per visit; from 9 P. M. to 7 A. M., $1.50 per visit. They have also agreed to render bills quarterly, and if the same are not settled within 30 days after presentation they will be placed in the hands of a collector employed by the association.
